is waiting till her pitcher is filled, another is carrying her's away, two others bear empty jars on their heads, and the three latter appear engaged in discourse. The uncovered parts of the figures are in white, the drapery dark coloured, and the ground red; the features of the females are more regular than is usually found on similar vases, and their attire is singular and diversified. The group has probably reference to some mythological subject. Three Greek letters (AZV) are scratched in at the bottom of the vase— $9\frac{1}{8}$ inches high.

418 A similar Vase, representing, in black on a red ground, the Combat of Hercules and a Sea Deity, probably the marine deity from whom Hercules undertook to liberate the daughter of Laomedon; two females are looking on— $9\frac{1}{4}$ inches high 1 / 3

419 A similar Vase—Male and Female Figure, each holding a spear, in a quadriga; Hermes stands at the head of the horses; Bacchus and Ceres holding two flaming torches, alongside. Black, relieved with purple, on a red ground, and the female tinted in white. Above is an inscription, consisting of seven characters— $9\frac{1}{2}$ inches high . 1 2 8

420 A similar Vase—Hercules strangling the Lion, which appears to have sprung on his shoulders; his club, sword, buckler, and cloak are appended. Black on a red ground; the black is relieved with white, purple, and outlines scratched in— $7\frac{1}{8}$ inches high . 1 2

421 A Lachrymatory, on which is represented a group, consisting of Pallas, near whom is an ox, Hermes, Bacchus and Hercules; black on a red ground— $9\frac{1}{2}$ inches high . 1 /

422 A Lachrymatory—a spirited composition, representing Hercules and another Hero assaulting Three Warriors, one of whom, an archer, is attired in the Phrygian habit, which leads to the presumption that this group represents Hercules taking vengeance on Laomedon, king of Troy, for his well known breach of faith; dark brown on white ground. A very rare and interesting subject— $8\frac{1}{4}$ inches high . 1 2 5
